PRESAGES SHIFT IN WORLD TRADE

The question which today per-plexes the people of Britain and the ontinent is, when will the United States open its gates to Argentine beef? The moment it does the world beef situation will change. Almost beyond a doubt there will be a strong upward turn in the price of Argentine beef products, and that price increase will be felt in millions of British and continental homes. Where the margin between income and living costs is narrow, as it is to huge numbers, there will be no option but to give up beef as an im-portant article of diet, as German and many other European peasants have ong since done.

Mr. Hoover is reported to have said uring his recent visit to Argentina hat within three years at the most the increasing population and food pressure in the United States would compel the admission of Argentine beef. But Argentina is not an endless source of beef supplies. Its popula-tion is increasing rapidly and the same process of turning the open ranges, where cattle were bred and prepared for market in an ideal, year-round, open pasture, is operat ing as in the western American states. The number of cattle in Argentina has decreased 32 per cent since 1924. In an article explaining Lord Sydenham says that while he credits Carlyle himself with genius, such works as "Frederick the Great" and his "French Revolution" show that he did not take nearly enough pains. Lord Sydenham has his own definition, which he first published 26 years ago: "A consummate sense of proportion." He goes on to say that his own handiwork is undoubtedly faulty, but tells of a critic who said it did not apply to a great artist or to a brilliant general-a Michaelangelo or a Napoleon.

"In both these cases," says Lord Sydenham, "I claim that it precisely fits the outstanding quality or genius and to the nearly lost art of states manship it is peculiarly well adapted. I imagine that many of us have encountered geniuses in whom 'an infinite capacity for taking pains' was conspicuously wanting!'

Admiral Mark Kerr says that many years ago he was a member of a group who were discussing Carlyle's definition and all agreed that it was not in any way correct, for the first quality of a good gardener, mechanic or other workman is an infinite capacity for taking pains, and such persons are seldom geniases. When invited to compose a more satisfactory definition, this was what Admiral Kerr, then of course a young man offered for consideration as being more accurate:

"Genius is the practical application of great imagination."

If the publishing business, backed as it is by a fairly experienced printing world, were to be reformed along modern lines, we would see a thousand per cent increase in all classes of readers.

Following its important and hopeful step of introducing the new characters, the Government must assume this responsibility as well. To believe that the reform will succeed without this backing would be an inexplicable blindness. If the State refuses to take over the printing and publishing industry, all the benefits which we had expected from the new characters will be lost.

But Turkey needs something even

But Turkey needs something even more fundamental than help from a harassed Government for the Turkish publishers. Unless the people set to work with patience and determination to master the new letters thoroughly, no amount of printing will help them. For the time being, this reform has simply piled a new illiteracy on top of the old, and much will have to be done before Turkey gets back to her starting point and begins to build up a nation that can read.

The in-tellectual demands of the Turkish people were always rather modest; they have almost touched zero since they have almost touched zero since the new characters came in. The best proof of this are the five or ten popular magazines which used to be published in Constantinople. Up to three or four months ago some of these illustrated weeklies and monthlies were issuing 20,000 or 30,000 copies. Suddenly this fell off to 2000, 1000 or even 500. Jane Austen and Charlotte Brontë

Darcy will be other than pleasant. We feel confident that with "her lively sportive manner of talking," that so astonished and alarmed her sister-in-law, Elizabeth will experi-ence only the undramatic pleasures that her author knows how to present so dramatically.

It is indeed this dramatic fervor in setting forth simple facts that endears Jane Austen to her readers. She pays them the compliment of a fastidious simplicity in her writings. In contrast to Charlotte Bronte, Jane Austen controls her characters with a gentle restraint. No one is ever in despair, no hearts break, there is no cloud beyond a wisp, that floats away to reveal blue skies, under which the delicately delineated figures, like puppets in a play of yes-terday, interest us with the characteristics of today. In some quiet English county her chapters open with an assured placidity. We begin at once to be on friendly terms with these people of a lelsurely period, with their folbles, inconsistencies, prejudices, sensibilities. Unlike Charlotte Bronte, Jane Austen is interested in neither the politics of her day, nor in types and unusual traits of character. The houses and scenery her novels are indicated only in few conventional touches. Her chief concern is the story she tells, and she makes few digressions into

With many such word-pictures is set the often sombre canvas of Charlotte Brontë's novels.

Each of these women writers has check; no fence, no hedge marks a boundary; the horses and cattle graze unrestricted, or the herd, pausing beside a small brook, seeks the shade of some near-by oaks, lies in the grass, or stands in the water cooling its flanks in the clear stream. The eye of the traveler wanders from this idyllic picture to the long, swelling lines of the prairie fading away into the dim horizon, and it will seldom meet with a sight more

2 1 nditions. Trading was largely pro-

ting the growing stringency in credit conditions. Trading was largely professional, small speculators generally showing little inclination to add to their commitments with the prospect of another "money squeeze" around the end of the month.

Call money renewed at 2 per cent. compared with 8 yesterday and 7 the day before. There was only a moderate supply of funds available because of the heavy withdrawals of interior and foreign banks within the last 10 days. Time money continued firm.

Hesumption of bullish activities in a select assortment of steel, copper, public utility and electrical equipment is sues is believed to have been inspired in prices farlier in the week. There is a rather general belief in Wall Street that any major reaction will be preceded by one or more 5,000,000-share sessions and until this increased activity develops, pools are showing an inclination to mark up their favorites, particularly those in which the floating supply is small.

Steels derived stimulus from the increase in the Bethlehem dividend and the large first half years earnings. Bethlehem moved un to a new peacement, which had been sluggish earlier in the week, advanced 3 points.

General Electric was again a spectary feature, soaring 12 points to a new high record at 275. American Telephone also moved into new high from the favorites and which had been sluggish earlier in the week, advanced 3 points.

Associated Gas and Electric System

13% Annual Gain

THIS substantial system gain is the result of properties I located in geographically separate areas. Service to a 5,300,000 population in 18 states, the Canadian Maritime Provinces, and the Philippine Islands, provides wide diversification in types of population, in sizes of communities and in industries served.

With geographical diversity, active areas offset duller sections. An unusual demand for electric service, for example, in Florida or New England offsets a smaller gain in Western Pennsylvania. The 13.3% annual gain for the twelve months ended May 31, 1929 compares with a 10.1% gain for the industry as a whole during 1928.

The population is increasing in the territories served and the demands for electricity are increasing at an even greater rate. Steadily growing earnings and the wide extent of the operations have made the Associated System a major public utility and given its securities an established investment position.

Exercise Class A "Rights" Now

"Rights" to subscribe at $42 per share to additional Class A Stock of Associated Gas and Electric Company have been issued and are now being exercised. The "Rights" will be void after July 30, 1929.

Subscribers may pay out of income as follows: Upon subscription, $10 per share; Oct. 15, 1929, $16; Jan. 15, 1930, $16. Interest at the rate of 6% per annum will be allowed on all payments from date of receipt to the date when dividends begin to accrue on the Class A Stock.

Ptolemy was a prominent figure in that splendid city founded by Alexander. It had long been the mighty commercial center of the Mediter-ranean world. To its docks sailed ships just returned from cruising along the Spanish and African coasts: ships which anchored beside others fresh from the torrid heat of the Indian Ocean. Tin from Britain, cotton from India, silk from China, spices, precious stones—Alexandria opened her gates to them all. Her opened her gates to them all. Her streets were crowded with jostling seafarers, while, serenely removed from the press of commerce, stood the palace of the rulers and the many buildings of the Royal Museum

Doctrine This word is accepted both as theoretical and as a practical term for it refers both to what is to be believed and to what is to be done. As we look at the derivation of the word, the Latin verb docere, "to teach," we can readily relate it to the action of teaching or instructing, but it also denotes that which is taught, the ideas laid down as true

A "doctrine" is the whole body of fundamentals relating to any department of know edge, religion, science, politics, etc. a "tenet" is simply one plank in the platform. "Dogma" is the specific creed formulated as the position of some church or school and insisted upon for acceptance; "precept" is generally a definite rule of conduct laid down by some competent person

The Peace of the World

N THE record of the progress of peace, July 24 may well be marked with a red milestone. More than that, the past week in the world's history constitutes a sort of field day for peace. The most confirmed realist must admit that what has happened in such widely separated points as Washington, London, and the banks of the Amur River is indicative of a world-wide sentiment against which the forces which make for war are powerless.

There has seldom been a more impressive spectacle than the ceremony at the White House Wednesday, at which the President of the United States proclaimed the completion of the Kellogg-Briand treaty for the renunciation of war. Representatives of forty-eight nations participating in the pact were present. When the President declared that "the influence of the treaty for the renunciation of war will be felt in a large proportion of all future international acts" many of those present must have reflected that even before its formal completion the treaty had China and Russia in a far-off corner of Asia. The moral influence of the pact alone was in this instance effective, but there was a significant promise of a purpose to add material to moral force in the President's reference to the "fulfillment of every opportunity that is calculated to implement this treaty and to extend the policy which it so nobly sets forth." There is no necessary hint of sanctions in this phrase, but there is the suggestion that much remains which may be done by all nations to give the treaty force and also to utilize the spirit which it has evoked by an international agreement for the removal of the causes which in the past have led to the wars now renounced.

Indeed, almost while the ceremonies at the White House were in progress there were being uttered in the British House of Commons words which indicated the purpose of that Government to co-operate in the checking of one potent cause of war, namely naval competition. Premier Ramsay MacDonald announced to the House that because of the Pact of Paris, and as a result of conversation with the United States, there would be an early conference on naval disarmament, that he himself would visit the United States for conference with President Hoover, and finally that as a gesture of friendliness England had ordered suspension of work on two cruisers, two submarines, and other important bits of naval construction. In the course of his speech he laid down one proposition which if followed by all the parties to the pending naval conference will assure success, namely, "We have determined that we shall not allow technical points to override great public issues involved in our being able to come to a It is interesting also to note that the British Premier expressed the hope that the disarmament conference might be held in a place to be "chosen by the United States, as a recognition of the splendid part played by its President in these transactions.

The reaction of the Administration at Washington to Mr. MacDonald's statement was, of course, immediate. President Hoover responded with a statement in which he expressed appreclation of the generous terms and good will of the British Government, and declared that the United States in response thereto would discontinue work on three cruisers comprehended in this year's construction program. He called attention to the fact that even at that the United States Navy would lag behind that of Great Britain, but he felt that this action was a suitable and proper one to take in view of the initiation of the policy of reducing naval building by Great Britain.

An essential quality of these footsteps on the path of peace is that they have been taken, not by one nation, or even by two, but that they constitute in fact the broadest sort of an international program. At Washington and Westminster words have been uttered of essentially identical import, and acts undertaken, without prior negotiation, of virtually similar effect. And the peace pact, the promulgation of which coincided with these very practical steps toward international harmony, is not to be ascribed to one nation alone. The part played in it by Secretary Kellogg need not be minimized or underestimated at all if due credit is given to M. Briand, Foreign Minister of France, for having initiated it. Nor would it now be in effect save that sixtytwo nations have given it their adherence and forty-eight were represented at the moment of its promulgation. Never in the history of the world has there been so much of united effort to establish an enduring peace and to base it upon agreements to which all nations, great and small, whatever their past antagonisms may have been, are now parties. This month of July, 1929, may pass into history as the golden era of peace. It is not a pax Americana, as an overnationalistic contemporary calls it, but a peace of virtually universal acceptance.

History's New Center of Gravity

T TENRY FORD in an idle moment may have uttered his contempt for history, but his name is destined to find place in it just the same. Not the drum and trumpet history—that has gone, the world hopes, forever—but the history of social, intellectual and economic progress, and it is that history about which the world is mainly concerned today. The center of gravity has shifted, Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia University, pointed out the other day. It has changed, he said, "from those political and military considerations which have been dominant for 300 years and is now resting on considerations that are economic and moral.

Few will dispute his assertion. Are not the international cartels concluded in the last few years, binding nations in trade, commerce and industry, sufficient evidence? Or the flutter over American tariff proposals in Europe, Asia, Africa and Australia? Or, from a moral standpoint, the pacts of peace and friendship, pacts which rifts subsequent to their signing have proved to be no mere scraps of paper? The arts of war are of less importance than the arts of peace in the history of the human race, and the Edisons, the Einsteins and Lindberghs are the heroes of modern times. The captain of industry is in the ascendant, and the political orator, however eloquent or persuasive, is definitely in the background.

The change is welcome. Yet it is necessary to see that the new orientation does not lead to conflicting units, groups which have only a selfish purpose to serve. As long as the economic considerations are employed to better conditions for all, there need be no hesitation in supporting them. The moral considerations ought to take care of themselves.

Civilians for War Lords

AN IMPORTANT tendency in the development of the Chinese Government, which has received very little publicity, even in China. is the increasing participation of civilians in the conduct of the National Government. A group of determined civilian leaders has come to the front in Nanking, according to reliable reports from the Chinese capital, and these men are gradually bringing actual control of the Government into their hands. They have been enabled to do this through the co-operation of Gen. Chiang Kai-shek, a war lord who appears to realize that civilian leaders must have a large measure of control even over military affairs if the Government is to be placed upon a firm and lasting basis. This is a novel idea in republican China, and it may not be easy for Western peoples to realize the difficulty of persuading dominant militarists in China to relinquish the control which has been almost entirely in their hands for the last twenty years.

The leaders of the dominant group at Nanking are Hu Han-min and Tan Yen-kai, two men with military training and the title of general, who are nevertheless civilians at heart, and who are fully aware of the necessity of bringing all branches of the Government, including the military arms, under the effective control of a civilian group. Little by little the militarists have been persuaded to relinquish affairs which come under civilian control as a matter of course in Western countries. The government railways provide a good example. In the past, war lords have taken over operation of the railways within their districts as a natural right, using the revenues for their own purposes and with small regard to the national railway administration. This has been true in most cases under the present Government, but the civilian group has been working steadily to turn over railway operation to the civilian authorities, and has now succeeded in a large measure in attaining

While Gen. Chiang Kai-shek has realized to some extent the importance of civilian control of the Government, there have been several recent evidences that he remains a war lord at heart. But he has worked with the civilian leaders of the Kuomintang from the beginning of the present revolution and respects their opinions. At times, even recently, he has taken matters into his own hands and acted the rôle of an old-fashioned military dictator, but apparently his civilian associates have eventually led him back toward the goal of a civilian government toward which they have been working. If this tendency continues to develop as it has done during the last few months, the Kuomintang leaders will have taken a real step forward.

The Scholar and Public Affairs

THE exhortation to "be a snob" which Robert I E. Rogers of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology recently addressed to the senior class of his students has aroused almost as much adverse criticism as the celebrated advice to "be a king" that George III received from his mother. One may disagree with some of the phraseology of Professor Rogers, and especially one may feel that his analysis of society as based upon the clash of organized classes would be truer if applied to the western world of the Middle Ages rather than to the Europe and America of the present day. But there is a good deal of sound sense in his thesis that college men as a class should take a more prominent part in public affairs than they have hitherto done; for if they have not some peculiar contri-bution to make to the world of politics, the justification is largely taken away from those of them who spend three or four energetic years in the pursuit of human learning.

And again, it is to be admitted that, if the political and social influence of college graduates is not so great as might be wished, the fault lies largely with themselves. For the tradition of the scholar throughout the ages has been to keep himself aloof from the affairs of the world. The fleeting theory of Plato that the scholar should keep himself out of the hustle of politics should keep himself out of the hustle of politics has unfortunately been far more effective than the practice of Socrates in enthusiastically throwing himself into it. But perhaps it will remain effective for only a short time longer; and the Presidency of Thomas G. Masaryk in Czecho-alovakia, and the free discussion of Prof. Gilbert Murray as possible British Ambassador to the United States, are good auguries for the future. But with the entrance of scholarship into the world every care should be taken that the world does not contaminate scholarship. Once the suspicion gains currency that scholarship is open to any influence, whether political or economic, other than the disinterested search for truth, the whole of its virtue is gone out of it; and this warning applies as much to those who control public opinion through the newspapers as to university professors. And if this intellectual integrity is to be preserved amidst the welter of influences unceasingly beating against it, the scholar cannot afford to act as an isolated and necessarily feeble individual.

Opulent Summer

OMEONE has complained that the trouble with summer is that there is too much of it while it lasts. This view might seem unreasonable unless, perhaps, expressed by an overzealous nature lover who undertakes to catalogue all the wonders to be observed on a single summer day. There can scarcely be too much of what is beautiful, although, to be sure, in the high noon of summer the beauty of the land is spread out under a sometimes too ardent

No longer is there any need to search out a few shyly blooming flowers, such as gave de-light in the carlier months, for now the true aim of spring's experiments in bloom is opulently apparent; and there is instead an embarrassment of choice when plucking the manifold blossoms. The hint of green that ran softly across the fields in May has become a profusion of color in bloom-filled meadows; and the low fringe of flags that early edged the brook now stands a shoulder-high forest of blades that must be pushed aside if one would reach the stream.

Midsummer is a time of affluence in nature's wonders, but there is not too much of it. Were there any complaint, it might be that 'Summer's lease hath all too short a date." Meanwhile, the shadows of the leaves, dappling the grass, give delight to one who has the leisure to observe their tremulous motion. The flash of a golden butterfly against the dark of a chestnut tree, or the bronze of a milkweed butterfly, suddenly merged in the brown of a woodland path, or the smaller one with pelka-dot wings, poised on a pink clover bloom; a row of birds, swinging and visiting on a low branch of a willow beside the brook-there are not too many of these lovely trifles that help to make up the perfection of summer time.

There is an almost universal desire to be out of doors throughout the whole length of the glad season; to rejoice in the gayety of cottage gardens, with their honeysuckle trellises and variegated blossoms, calling the bees through the scented air; to breathe the sweet perfume of upland hills and high plains; or to count the rounded fragrant stacks in the fields where haying is in progress toward orderly provision for later needs.

The grasshoppers and cicadas express their pleasure, shrilling their thin tunes; the dapper dragon fly darts through the sunshine, pivots motionless for a moment on a blade of grass, as if the better to display its wings of sapphire gauze; and in the rich fullness of a single summer afternoon, one may

Honoring the Dinner Pail

E KNOW without asking what happened to the old oaken bucket that hung in the well. Moss collected on the brim, its sides began to leak, the iron dipper turned to rust, so that a practical age hurried the bucket to a museum, and substituted a bubbler drinking fountain that requires only that a thirsty man stoop over the bowl, give the pedal a sharp push, and then pick his hat and necktie out of the lilac bushes across the street.

The same relentless modernity is about to overtake another friend of humanity, the oldfashioned dinner pail, unless a generation that has sampled its generous bounty makes itself heard, and that quickly.

Nobody actually knows the name of the first toiler to remove at noontime the dinner pail's tin cupola, reach eager fingers within, and then exclaim wistfully: "Well, I wonder if we'll have fried chicken today!" But every mother's son is fully aware that for these many years the hard work of the world has been accomplished by members of the Dinner Pail Brigade, men perched in rumbling locomotive cabs, men in grimy coal pits, at factory benches, sitting beside the bronzed sheaves at harvest time. All of these men stayed by the goods, while gentler stuff sought the laden board.

It is cheering news, therefore, to read in the New Haven System Magazine, Along the Line, that Irving E. Weller, railroad delivery clerk at Pittsfield, Mass., stands ready to champion the cause of the disappearing dinner pail. Mr. Weller owns one that has reached its thirtieth birthday. It was fashioned by a jolly tinsmith who knew his trade, and it was made to last a lifetime. Through rain and sleet, through sunshine and shadow, this glittering treasure chest has been a pal "good and true," a servitor always ready to befriend and cheer.

In the past, political chieftains have won popular applause by proclaiming the benefits of "The Full Dinner Pail," but what party ever rode to victory by promising the populace thin cucumber sandwiches and smaller sanitary lunch hoves?

Banish the dinner pail? Never!

The widespread protest from different cities of the United States against objectionable cigarette advertising on billboards has resulted in an assurance from the National Association of Outdoor Advertisers' that care would be taken to keep offensive "copy" from public posters. Perhaps this may encourage magazine readers to make similar demands regarding cigarette advertisements in their periodicals.

"The Handwriting on the Wall"

Service examination for typists is the making of a clean copy from a rough draft. This sounds simple enough, but when you consider that a "rough draft" is usually a manuscript that has been scribbled and scratched and relined and interlined and sidetracked and blurred and blotted until it looks like a picture of barbed wire entanglements, the test takes on a more serious aspect. Yet the untangling of such, the bringing of order out of chaos, is no small part of the typist's work. She has to be more than a handwriting expert.

Doubtless many a typist, when confronted with a baffling page of scrawls, has echoed the words of a certain compositor under similar circumstances: "Had Belshazzar compositor under similar circumstances: "Had Belshazzar seen this handwriting on the wall, he would have been terrified indeed!" Many otherwise worthy people appear to be "found wanting" when it comes to penmanship. Few people are adept at dictating their essays, their novels, their articles, or even their letters. The majority wrestle with pad and pencil, and the typist is the buffer between the writer and the printer. As such she (or he) deserves a vote of thanks, a medal of respect, and a bow of recognition for patient and intelligent interpretation of many tion for patient and intelligent interpretation of many a hopeless looking scrawl, many a page of what is politely

It is interesting to note a few of the anecdotes of the days before the typist and her machine became an accepted and expected part of the scheme of things. In those days the "rough draft" went directly to the printer, and because of his chirography many a literary light was no hero to his compositor. Thackeray's handwriting was almost microscopic. He boasted that he could write the Lord's Prayer on his thumb nail. Charlotte Brontë's writing looked as if written with the point of a needle, R. D. Blackmore, William Black, George W. Cable, and Julian Hawthorne were likewise among the microscopic penmen. Captain Marryat's printer, it is said, was in the habit of putting a pin in the manuscript where he left off, so that he could find the place again. Dickens' penmanship also was of the smallest, and he made the deciphering of it the harder by writing with blue ink on blue paper!

Many anecdotes are told of Carlyle's handwriting. A friend wrote of it: "Eccentric and spiteful little flourishes dert about his representations of the state of

Some letters slope in one way, some in another, some are halt, maimed, and crippled, and all are blind."

Balzac was even worse. His printers stipulated that they be required to work only one hour at a time on his manuscripts. A French writer says that Balzac's words were "interlined, crossed, written upside down, mixed, interlaced, and knotted, forming a word puzsle which made even the stoutest compositor quail." Victor Hugo's manuscripts were said to be a mass of blots and blurs. Byron's handwriting was "a mere scrawl." He was also in the habit of adding extensively to his proofs. It is on record that one poem which contained 400 words when sent to the printer, was expanded to 1500 when the first proof. was returned.

It had to be returned to England for translation! Nathaniel Hawtborne left numerous manuscripts which were long unpublished because no one could decipher them. Henry Ward Beecher had certain peculiarities of which his daughter, who acted as his copyist, said that she tried to remember: that if a letter was dotted, it was not an i, if it was crossed, it was not a t, and if a word began with a capital it did not begin a and if a word began with a capital, it did not begin a sentence. Prof. E. S. Morse was another distinguished man with original ways of handling a pen. A letter to him from Thomas Bailey Aldrich is both interesting and amusing:

My dear Mr. Morse:

It was very pleasant for me to get a letter from you the other day. Perhaps I should have found it pleasanter if I had been able to decipher it. I don't think I mastered anything beyond the date (which I knew) and the signature (which I guessed at).

There's a singular and perpetual charm in a letter of yours: It never grows old, it never loses its novelty. One can say to one's self every morning, "There's that letter of Morse's. I haven't read it yet. I think I'll take another shy at it today, and maybe I shall be able in the course of a few days to make out what he means by those it's that look like w's, and those i's that haven't any eyebrows." Other letters are read and thrown away and forgotter; but yours are kept forever unread. One of them will last a reasonable man a lifetime.

Admiringly yours,

Horace Greeley stood in a class by himself. Many stories are on record of the difficulties encountered by his associates in deciphering his written messages. Perhaps the best known is that of a man whom he discharged for incompetence. The man, however, used the letter as a recommendation in getting another job, and no one knew the difference.

In view of the fact that there still seem to be numer careless or thoughtless wielders of even the most modern stylus, the question might be asked, in the words of Ethel Lynn Beers:

Art thou a pen whose task shall be To drown in ink What writers think?

If one's thoughts are worthy of putting on paper, if one has a message for mankind, surely these are too valuable to be obscured by a mere splutter of ink or a blur of crayon. If the pen is to be mightier than the sword, it might be well to handle it with a little more dextenty. However, so long as we have the patient typist to act as "a Daniel come to judgment," the situation is far from hopeless!

Notes From Nanking

Nanking
With opposition groups in different parts of China gradually losing their strength, the Nanking Government feels that it is finally established on a firm basis. Some policies of the Kuomintang are still vigorously opposed, but probably not more so than in more strongly unified confitries. The confidence of party leaders is undoubtedly greater this summer than at any previous time, because they believe a long period of comparative freedom from large-scale civil wars is assured.
With nominal unification of the country in the spring of 1928, Kuomintang leaders privately stated that they could establish themselves if they had two years at their disposal. They have now had more than a year, and their position undoubtedly is stronger than it was a year ago. Even the enemies of the present government admit that nothing better is in sight. that nothing better is in sight. 1 1 1

The decision of the Central Executive Committee The decision of the Central Executive Committee of the Kuomintang to limit the period of "political tutelage" to six years from this summer is regarded as one of the most important made by the party heads. It will be recalled that the party founder, Dr. Sun Yat-sen, stipulated that the Chinese revolution should be divided into lated that the Chinese revolution should be divided into three periods, the first of unification by force, the second of political tutelage, in which the people should be taught the fundamental ideals of self-government, and the third of real representative government. Nanking chiefs have not previously indicated just how long they believed the second period would continue; and the fact they now feel sufficiently confident to set a definite limit, is regarded as significant. This action was, perhaps, inspired at this time by the demand of Chinese liberals for a more definite statement of the rights of the common people. statement of the rights of the common people.

T. V. Soong, the Minister of Finance, is probably the hardest working man in China these days. He has traveled to all parts of the country since nominal unification a year ago, and has endeavored to persuade provinc authorities of the importance of an effective central financial control. The extent of his success will not be apparent for some time. He has at least been permitted to place his own nominees in Hankow, Canton and Peiping, and these men may be trusted to attempt edu-cation of provincial authorities. He has taken with him American advisers on his trips to Canton and Hankow and these have helped to reorganize the provincial finances. Even under the monarchy, the Chinese provinces did not make very large returns to the Central Govern-ment, so that the idea is novel, and it is therefore inevi-table that some time will be required for the local groups to realize its importance in establishing domestic and foreign credit.

Persistent protests from North China have finally persuaded the Nanking Government to abolish the so-called district system for universities, established a year agowhen the Nationalist armies took over the north. The educational leaders here were besieged with requests for money for education from all parts of China, and were at a loss as to suitable distribution of the funds in hand. They finally worked out the district system, which allotted educational funds in equal portions to the various districts into which China was divided. But the Peiping schools, which have always been the largest and most influential in the country, were dissatisfied with this arrangement, and contended that each school should be allotted funds on the basis of its needs and importance. Agitation has been carried on to persuade the government educational bureau to alter the scheme, and the campaign has now been successful.

The Government has succeeded better than most persons had expected in providing funds for government schools. It has not been possible to expand the schools, and in some cases expenses have been sharply cut, but teachers who have been several months in arrears in previous years have not been far behind at any time this year, and before the end of summer it appears the Government will be able to find money for all of their salaries for the year.

An equality between the sexes more complete than any which exists in Western countries today is supported by Wei Tao-min, acting director of the judicial yuan (board), the chief legal official in China in the absence of Dr. Wang Chung-hui in Europe. as much entitled to sue their wives for divorce and aske them for support as women are entitled to sue their husbands for alimony. "The function of the court in a divorce case henceforward should be the determination of the question as to which of the two parties is wrong in the eyes of the law," said Mr. Wei. "If the wife is wrong, abe should pay damages to her husband just as the husband nust pay alimony if he is in the wrong."

The delay in produffating the law granting the right of succession to women, which revolutionizes the status of Chinese women, has been caused by discussion of whether the law should be made retroactive. Mr. Wei also announced that the procurator's court, an innovation in China since the Republic's foundation, will be abolished, having been found unsatisfactory. The hien (county) court will be re-established, and made the unit of the Chinese judicial system, a move which the judicial board believes will expedite justice.

"Freedom of the Press"

TO THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR:

"Freedom of the Press" is a phrase frequently heard of late, and in such uses as make it clear that its users do not all give it the same meaning. As usual, definition is necessary for right understanding.

Freedom is a much abused word. Some declare there is no freedom; others that the word stands for unrestrained license. Both applications are extreme. For one implies an absolutism of authority; the other encroachment upon natural rights of others which cannot be tolerated. Therefore both uses are to be avoided.

natural rights of others which cannot be tolerated. Therefore both uses are to be avoided.

There is, however, perfect freedom in the law of justice, mercifully and considerately applied. And only in this sense can its true meaning be found. That is, secognition of the same consideration for others' motives and acts as one asks and expects for his own.

Question arises whether a different rule should operate in respect of the press. Manifestly not. Encroachment upon inalienable and natural rights is intolerable for all, by individual or group.

If the daily newspaper, for instance, pours into the sacred precincts of the home a stream of sensational scandal, is it not thereby encroaching? If Sunday morning supplements with "thirty-two pages of comics" (?) make it difficult for busy parents to properly attend to religious instruction of the young, is it not a subversion? Yes, perhaps the purchaser should beware. But when the newspaper has become a virtually indispensable organ of information, has it not then assumed a public function wherein the public has acquired certain sefinable rights by common law? And these rights make it altogether probable, nay, even sure, that the so-called freedom of the press will be taken in hand by the strong force of legal enactment unless the press itself shall voluntarily reform.

Every thinker knows that the home is the fundamental unit of society—basis of commerce, state and church. And that which does violence to home interests cannot long be szcused. To weigh down the youthful thought with a daily burden of villainy gathered almost from the "ends of the earth"; to drag into public view the most sacred sanctities of private and domestic life, often to the greatest distress of innocent persons; to thrust so far into the administration of criminal law as virtually to "try the case in the newspapers," and thereby seriously affect and sometimes frustrate action by the courts; to go so far toward treason as openly to "aid and abot" the criminal class in violating fundamental law; all are, in fact, acts of license which must fall first under censure of right-visioned people, and next under legal restraint. Otherwise society would be helpless.

And signs of the times are not wanting to prove the force of these statements.
